Dear Francis:

Since the four years, when we were together for the Saharas program, many people have asked me whether I had heard from you, or whether I had written to you. At first I fumbled with an unsatisfactory reply, that both of us were busy, but I found soon that this was an incorrect, or an incomplete, answer. I soon amended it to say that you were one of the few people I knew about whom I felt completely contented. Feeling that, what use was there to write?

Today I feel even more that way. On the basis of my own thoughts, I can't find any reason therefore to explain why I am writing to you. It must be, then,
